Looking for a solid academic foundation?

NewburyWorks.

Classes fueled by debate and discussion. A liberal arts tradition that strengthens problem solving and critical thinking ability. Fieldwork that brings you face-to-face with Boston's business leaders. And that's just the beginning.

If Newbury were a novel, it would be written in first person. Our entire academic experience is personalized, from the time management plans in First Year Seminar to targeted coursework in every program of study.

This is not a one-size-fits-all education. Faculty advisors consider your individual goals and help you create a long-range strategy for success. Tutoring techniques can be adjusted to work with your personal strengths and challenges. Classes are intentionally small, allowing you to make real connections with professors.

That same diligence is applied to campus technology. Newbury is 100 percent wireless and you'll find computers and smartboards in almost every classroom. From the CAD systems in interior design to video editing equipment and 24/7 Mac labs, our learning environment is state-of-the-art.

While many colleges consider a liberal arts education to be the finish line, we see it as a launching pad. Newbury integrates a foundation in the liberal arts with a continuing focus on career development. You'll gain a broad perspective and a fluid thought process – skills that are as invaluable now as they will be later in life.

ACADEMICS

Studies show that a liberal arts education enhances analytical skills and adaptability – valuable qualities in any career. That's why Newbury Works.

Put theory into practice. Newbury classes learn from case studies that examine real businesses – and real strategies for success.

You'd be amazed what we call our faculty. interior designer • computer programmer • writer • attorney • chef • sports psychologist • social worker • gourmet candy store owner • marathon trainer • environmentalist • graphic designer • accountant • criminalist • fashion designer • hotel manager • CEO

Want professors who are experts in their fields?

NewburyWorks.

When it comes to our teaching philosophy, professional expertise is more than a goal – it’s a given. By design, the Newbury curriculum blends academic theory with practical experience.

FACULTY

In cities like New York and Los Angeles, people spend big money on seminars taught by leaders in industry. Here at Newbury, professional guidance is an everyday occurrence – no extra charge.

All Newbury professors have some degree of professional experience and many continue to work in their fields. You might take an ethics course with a practicing physical therapist or learn about convention management from a consultant to elite Boston hotels.

We also reach into the community for talented teaching. In the Communication department alone, a local deejay teaches radio courses, a veteran reporter teaches news writing, and television labs are held in the studios of Brookline Access Television.

Don’t let all the professionalism fool you – Newbury faculty are as helpful as they are accomplished. They contact colleagues to line up internships and volunteer their services for the academic support team. Along with their real world titles, they’re known across campus as mentors and friends.

Ready for internships with Boston business leaders?
NewburyWorks.

At Newbury, internships aren't just desired – they're required. Our internship program is a model for career-minded colleges everywhere. Easy access to Boston and its infinite opportunities allows Newbury students to explore the world of work, long before graduation.

REAL WORLD EXPERIENCE

Imagine a place where business owners and executives come to seek out top talent, hard workers, and future leaders. In Boston, that place is Newbury College.

As an intern at Newbury, you can go behind the scenes at a five-star restaurant. Gain firsthand financial knowledge at a "big four" accounting firm. Find your sense of justice at the federal courthouse. Get creative inside an international ad agency. Go pro with more than a dozen professional sports teams across Massachusetts.

Newbury has hundreds of existing partnerships, but don't worry if your dream job isn't on the list. Our Career Services department can help you design an internship specific to your goals and interests.

Real-world readiness happens everywhere at Newbury. Culinary students train in industrial-grade facilities every single day. Boston CEOs make surprise appearances as guest lecturers. And business classes solve real problems for real corporations.

Like any of the institutions we work with, Newbury has its eye on the future. From work-study to field trips and internships, we're always finding new ways to prepare you for success.

Need teamwork, drive, and competitive thrills?

NewburyWorks.

Anyone who follows NCAA Division III sports knows that athletic scholarships aren't part of the game. Our student-athletes play for even bigger rewards, including the thrill of competition and a superior sense of sportsmanship.

Newbury Nighthawks are experts at balancing work and play. The qualities that make them successful on the field – teamwork, drive, determination – serve them equally well in classes and interviews.

Winning is fun too, as the men's volleyball team proves year after year. Newbury players break records, earn conference titles, and take home championship trophies.

They're recognized highly across the Eastern College Athletic Conference (ECAC), the New England Collegiate Conference (NECC), and the North East Collegiate Volleyball Association (NECVA, Men's Volleyball).

For Nighthawks fans, victory often means scoring a ticket to the big game. Our athletic events are so popular that showing up early is a must. Once your eyes adjust to the sea of green and gold, you won't be able to miss the Nighthawk pride.

Want to live college life to the fullest?

NewburyWorks.

More than 250,000 students can't be wrong: Boston is the ultimate college town. Newbury makes the most of it with a safe, laid back campus just minutes from the hustle and bustle of the city.

STUDENT LIFE

Leave it to Newbury to turn the concept of residence halls upside down. Instead of row after row of dorms, our students can choose from a brownstone, a converted bed and breakfast, a Victorian mansion, and other historic buildings. Some residence halls are on campus. Others are in hip spots like Coolidge Corner and Fenway. All make a great home away from home.

If you think a small campus means "not much to do," think again. Dances. Dodgeball. Barbecues in the quad. Video game tournaments. Scavenger hunts. Mani/pedi nights. Breakfast by Moonlight during finals. And the legendary Mr. Newbury contest – our own beauty pageant gone hilariously wrong.

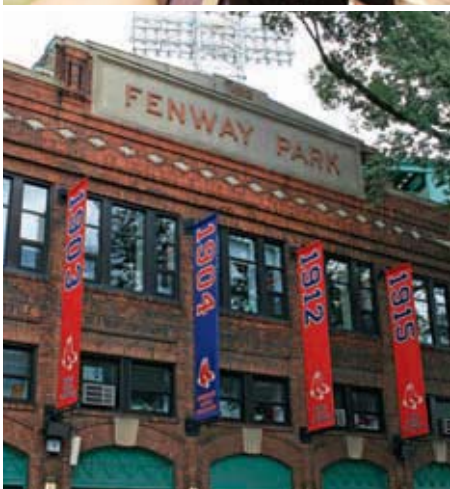

And then there's Boston – or as we like to call it, "extended campus." Whether your thing is shopping and museums or baseball and American history, you won't be disappointed. To take advantage of all Boston has to offer, park the car and take the "T" (the city's rapid transit system). Newbury's stop is just down the street and from there, you can go anywhere.

Newbury Works together. Community service is big at Newbury, from local passions like the Boston Animal League to alternative spring break along the Gulf Coast.

Working for you. That's the attitude Newbury faculty and staff bring to Career Services. Recently, one video resume inspired a professor to tape all her students for interview practice.

There's no question that NewburyWorks.
Just ask our alumni.

They'll tell you about the culinary internship that led to an executive chef position. The interior design graduate who launched her own firm. And the sports nut who turned his knack for numbers into a finance job with the Boston Bruins.

OUTCOMES

Our alumni's accomplishments could fill the pages of this book (and that's just last year's class). From the fashion major who landed at Chanel to the architectural designer now working at Maverick Integration, the list of Newbury success stories is long, varied, and impressive.

Their careers run the gamut, but our graduates have one thing in common: at Newbury, they learned how to get the job done. Employers tell us that even as interns, our students are exceptionally prepared and professional.

Most credit the level of challenge and support they found here at Newbury College. Years past graduation, our alumni still return to campus. They visit faculty members and coaches. They attend networking events with their former classmates. They travel hundreds of miles for our career fairs – as the ones doing the hiring.

Newbury graduates know what works in the real world. As we celebrate their success, we look forward to working with the next generation of Nighthawks.

Real connections. The Newbury network of alumni can literally connect you to thousands of businesses and organizations worldwide.
